Security; retirement provision/ future-oriented; housing costs; reasonable rents; income; quality of life; living comfort	Security; housing costs; reasonable rents; income; quality of life; living comfort	there should be much more social housing, we live privately for rent in a totally moldy, rotten apartment on the 3rd floor with extremely drafty windows, WITHOUT room doors (so warm heating is not possible), the 70s aerated concrete of the much too thin outer walls apparently has no pores, so the walls are wet like a sponge) and our rich landlord "naturally" blames us. We urgently need to move out of here. But otherwise there are only moldy apartments here, where the walls have just been painted white. ALL people should have the right to an affordable, mold-free apartment.

Housing costs; income; appreciation; amenities/ substandard; transfer payments; old-age provision/ future-oriented; quality of life; reasonable rents; stability; living comfort; security; apartment size; location (surroundings)	Stability; equipment/substandard; housing costs; security; year of construction of the apartment; household size; length of residence; apartment size; income; reasonable rents	I have been working in the construction industry in Munich for over 10 years. In Munich, the "Munich Model of Socially Responsible Land Use" (SoBoN) applies to new construction projects. This model stipulates that a certain proportion of the newly created living space must be earmarked for subsidized housing. Social housing quota according to SoBoN: - 60 % of the living space must be built in subsidized housing, divided into: - 40 % "Munich Model" or EOF (income-oriented funding) - 20 % KMB (conceptual rental housing) These requirements apply primarily to larger new construction projects, especially if a development plan is required. Different regulations may apply to smaller projects or the redensification of existing buildings. Munich uses this model to create a mix of socially subsidized and privately financed housing and to secure affordable housing.

Publicly subsidized housing (social housing) is financed by government subsidies such as grants or low-interest loans to provide affordable housing for low-income households. Rents are regulated by the state and are cheaper than on the open market, often combined with a rent and occupancy commitment for a certain period of time. In contrast, privately financed housing is built without state support, is aimed at all income groups and is not subject to rent control, which is why rents are usually in line with the market or higher.	no	2	2

The main difference between social housing and privately financed housing lies in the subsidy, the fixed rents and the access requirements. 1. social housing (subsidized housing) - subsidized by the state: Builders receive public funding (e.g. low-interest loans or grants). - Rent control: Rents are capped and are below the market price. - Occupancy restriction: Only people with a certificate of eligibility for housing (WBS) may move in. This is awarded on the basis of income limits. - Fixed-term commitment: Rent and occupancy restrictions apply for a certain period of time (often 20-40 years). After that, the apartment can be placed on the open market.

no	2	_other_	I think it can't be answered with a simple yes or no. It depends entirely on what question you ask. Are they disadvantaged because they have to live in a small, substandard apartment even though the neighbour has their own but much nicer apartment? Yes, definitely. But is the neighbour disadvantaged because they don't get any housing subsidies and have to finance everything themselves? Yes, they are. So I think it's hard to answer this question so generally.	3
